PART 2

DESCRIPTION
House and double garage. 1936 by Leslie H Kemp and Frederick E Tasker for Mr Morrell, a local builder and developer. Modern style. Mottled red and brown Flemish bond brick, with flat roofs above tiled eaves and tall stacks. A long rectangular composition, with central 2-storey block flanked by integral garage to left and by single-storey billiard room to right. Roof-top tank room provides a vertical emphasis. All windows are original casements with horizontal glazing bars. Timber double doors to garage. Central entrance door of timber, with diagonal panels, set under projecting balcony of patterned vertical and horizontal bricks, and between planters of vertical bricks. Tiled door surround and mosaic steps. French window on to balcony; horizontal windows to either side of door complete a symmetrical composition. Garden front is more asymmetrical, having a regular 4-bay composition only in the centre, with smaller windows and service doors to right, and inset single-storey loggia to left. This has large (6-light) window to rear, giving on to the drawing room. INTERIOR: the interior is particularly lavish. Hallway of double height, with open well staircase and balcony having Art Deco style metal balustrade with urn finials to hand rail. All rooms with original veneered doors and door furniture. The drawing room with stepped and moulded ceiling surround. Rooms with original fire surrounds, that to the drawing room of black marble, and that in the principal bedroom incorporating an original electric fire and fluted illuminated glass surround. Most remarkable is the bathroom en suite with the master bedroom, with onyx surrounds, peach glass mirrors and fluted lighting panels. Smaller tiled bathroom retains original tiling and fittings. Included as a remarkably complete and lavish example of a 1930's house, for a successful local businessman with whom Kemp and Tasker had close connections. ## PART 2

DESCRIPTION
Lido. Built in 1937. Designed by Harry Rowbotham and T L Smithson in modern style for the LCC. Comprises a rectangular bathing pool enclosed by a 3 metre high red brick wall, with brick on edge pattern at the top. Along each side are single storey flat-roofed pavilion buildings with metal Crittall windows throughout and rendered parapets, window surrounds, door surrounds and plinths. The south side has the largest number of pavilions; these include main entrance with turnstiles and paybox and a vestibule on either side of which changing rooms for men and women are situated. The original square clock is situated in the projecting centre of the poolside front with three entrances underneath and one window on either side recessed. This is flanked by two projecting changing rooms with two windows each and then recessed parts with seven windows. Attached to east and west are further entrance vestibules with a large hall to one side and offices to the other, five windows in all. On the north side is the cafe building with taller central section with original signage in the centre and pattern of horizontal bands and French windows to the ground floor flanked by lower sections with one tall window and wide doors. HISTORY: Harry Rowbotham and T L Smithson also designed the similar Victoria Park Lido of 1936 (since demolished) and the Charlton and Parliament Hill Fields lidos. Initially the LCC provided land for lidos in its parks but the lidos were operated by the individual local authorities. During the 1930s the LCC assumed responsibility for providing its own lidos. Sources The Thirties Society, Farewell My Lido, London 1991
